The New Fuel and Illuminator.

And lied science has recently added to the great investions of the day a process for extracing full from water. The author of this process. Mr. Kuck an English practical cheme, has realized the old dream of scientists that the exhaustless heating power stored in water may be securily employed for mechanical and lomestic purposes. This brilliant idea, has been successfully tested and developed in the arre works on the banks of the river near Battersea Park, and the process which it originatdisex remely simple and easily put in pracie. Ordinary steam is brought through a the from one of the boilers of an engine, and is allowed to pass through a red-hot horse-shoestaged tube, reposing in a fiercely burning farmer. White in this tube the steam is superheated, so that its oxygen and hydrogen are ready to dissolve their alliance, and afterwards it is ferred into a retort filed with incandescent coke and iron fragments. The oxygon is left beined and forms with the iron sed s of black rust, the hydrogen passes freely through the rea retort, and when certain sulphurous values have been disengaged from the residual gas there comes forth the "heating gas," super-eminently suited for all calorific purposes, where heat without light is demanded. It is admirably adapted for all kinds of stores and sterm engine boilers. The cost of the gas at the works is found to be only seven pence for a thousand cubic feet, and this quantity would boil about titly gallous of edd water. This steam, which is now supplied by an indeper-The distinctive feature of the Ruck process for making the new fuel gas is in the decomposition of the superh ated flame by means of coke and iron, which remain for long periods in the retort without requiring change. Combined with this is also an arrangement for carbonizing the hearing gas for purposes of illumina-tion. This is done by making it pass through od, from which its carbon is received, and whence it issues an excellent gas, equal in illuminating power to six een candles for a consumption of five cubic feet per hour in an Argand Lurner. The cost of the gas, as used for light, is a trifle less than fixly cents per thou-

SEARCHING FOR THE SCRIPTURES. - The Boston Post soys: "During the debate in the Legislature on the Summer resolutions Mr. J. B. Smith, the representative from Cambridge, was addressing the House in favor of rescinding the resolutions as an act of justice to Mr. Sumner. While making an elequent and strenuous plea for peace, fraternity and good-will throughout the nation he paused, and in a very impressive manner called the attention of the House to a memorable passage of the Scriptures, as a method of enforcing his argument more strongly upon the minds of those who heard him. Confident that the sublime beauty of its sentiment would make an impression upon so iupressible, religious, and fervent a body, Mr. Smith requested the clerk to find the passage in a copy of the Bible and read it to the House. Mr. Smith's manuer exacted undivided attention, and as he waited for the clerk to produce the Bible there was a perfect silence in the House. The clerk, however, seemed to be somewhat embarrassed. After diligent search upon tables, stelves, in drawers, and every other receptacle that contained pamphlet, book, magazine, or anything that resembled a pornon of the Scriptures, he was forced to declare in an undersone that 'there was no Bible there!' The House perceived the deficiency, and for a moment a tinge of salness seemed to overcome the assembly, but this gave way at last to: n approach to merriment. Mr. Smith, however, maintained his impressive artitude, and waited for the clerk to comply with his request.

'Recite the chapter,' ejaculated an impatient meniber. "I prefer, said Mr. Smith, 'that the clerk, whose elecutionary powers are so well understood and appreciated by the House, should read the whole chapter-it is necessary to have precept and context.'

"This the clerk, the most obliging of individuals as well as the most efficient of clerks, certainly one of the most reverent-was unabe to do. Pages were summoned to search for a Bible, Mr. Smith meanwhile awaiting their return. The pages were absent for a long time. Evidently there was no Bible in a reflection upon the character of one of the settlement. most religious States in the whole nation, disunguished for the pious and devout element in its representative body, and with so many elequent elergymen prominent in its composition. No Bable! It seemed impossible. Even the quantity of the Speaker was disturbed. No Bible! It certainly was incredible. No Bible in the House of Representatives! went from mouth to mouth. No Bible! said Mr. Smith, in a deep, sonerous voice. No Bible, mournfully rejoined the clerk. Finally, let us hash to say, this embarrassment was removed. A page returned with a Bible, and the required passage was read from Luke ii. Li and 14.

A DIVORCE SUIT.-The divorce suit of Doign vs. Dodge has ended in a most startling manner. One of the most astorishing affidavits ever made in court was read by the counof for the defendant from the plaintiff, Mrs. Doige, on Saturday. The affidavit sets forth that the proceedings against Dodge were a conspircey, undertaken at the instance of her attorney. Finley; that this Finley having got her the ler his power arranged the plans to enable her to secure a divorce, the chief of which was he pretended assignation scheme of the 1st of thuary, in which Dodge and a Julia Pierce henred; that the affidavit making such charges was false, that under the threats of said Finley he had entered into this conspiracy, and that she had signed a paper agreeing to pay Julia Pierce $1,000 for entrapping Dodge. The cament also sets forth that her previous affidavits charging bad treatment, and in fact all e principal points embraced in the original affiliavits, under which the suit was commencwere false, and only made under the threats of Finley. Finley told Mrs. Dodge that unless she made such affidavits she would certainly to the State's prison. Finley, furthermore, when he found that Dodge had found out the Caspiracy urged her to poison him as the only way of clearing themselves. The judge has adjourned a final settlement of the case until
